When buying an item from a store, the price is displayed which is generally given as a discount from the original retail price. It is only when a price is often displayed which is much higher than the discount that you know you are getting a great deal on your purchase. More information about the production of the merchandise, analysis of the worth of the products, their long-term performance and/or their quality can be found on the invoice, the delivery notice, the bill of exchange, the contract documents or the commercial guarantee. The third price of a product is the price you pay for it immediately prior to its delivery. This price is sometimes expressed in the contract as a Purchase price or Price agreed on the Buyer side. The Seller's price is the price he is willing to accept for his product, an amount he hopes to obtain from the Buyer. Offers are often made at different price levels for the same good or service (price differentiation). Depending on the nature of the product or service and the other available products or services, a good or service can be seen as competitive or not. In competitive markets, manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers try to price their products or services in such a way as to reduce the price relative to the price of competing products or services. In competitive markets, where manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers compete, offers are often made at different price levels for the same product or service (price differentiation).
