Triceratops A Triceratops is an extinct genus and family of horned herbivores, and is a member of the theropod dinosaurs. The Triceratops was the largest animal of the Cretaceous period. There are currently three species of Triceratops known. Triceratops prorsus and Triceratops horridus are the only known species of the genus. However, the third species was published in 2013. Some sources consider the Triceratops as an order of the diplodocoids. The fossils of Triceratops are found in the Crato Formation in Brazil, the Ancoraire Formation in Morocco, and the Kulua Gola and Rosebud formations in Utah, United States. The initial excavations of the newly discovered species were undertaken by the American paleontologist Peter Makovicky, after which they were sent for further study to the Academy of Natural Sciences of Drexel University, to the Royal Belgian Institute of Natural Sciences, and to the Center for Paleontology and Geology of the University of Buenos Aires.
